

Is the NPPF delivering houses in the right places?

The RTPI has analysed the location of permissions granted for over 220,000 new homes in twelve fast-growing English city-regions, to explore how changes to planning policy influence the sustainability of development patterns.

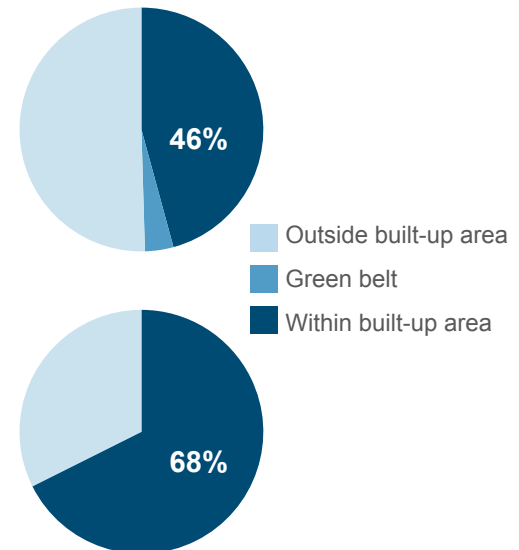

Are housing permissions close to major areas of employment?

Are housing permissions close to railway stations?

Are housing permissions located within the built-up area?

This analysis covers permissions for schemes with 50 or more houses. Smaller housing developments are not included